ABSTRACT

The 1966-67 annual report of Indian education from the Montana State Department of Public Instruction emphasizes the growing awareness of Indian youth looking to higher education and vocational training beyond high school. It is noted that the Indian education supervisor, in cooperation with the Bureau of Indian Affairs, disseminates information regarding financial aid available for post-high-school education. The report discusses the followup program conducted by the 2 offices to encourage and stimulate greater student achievement. The document lists those who took advantage of the assistance for additional education during the year 1966-67. Brief descriptions of each of the 7 Indian reservations in Montana are given, along with statistics on enrollment, attendance, graduates, dropouts, adult students, and reimbursements and disbursements of Federal funds for Indian education in Montana. In conclusion, it is noted that administrators of schools with Indian enrollments indicated a need for improvements in reading and attendance, and a decrease in dropout rates among Indian students. FOREWORD

Many schools with high Indian enrollment operate without assistance from Johnson O'Malley Act funds. Thus, this report includes information in addition to that used as a basis for Johnson O'Malley Act reimbursement.

Necessary data on the Johnson O'Malley Act funds was reported directly to the Bureau of Indian Affairs, according with Section 302, 10C, Chapter 3, Part II, Volume VI of the Manual of Regulations.

HIGHER EDUCATION

With the ever growing awareness that high school education is inadequate preparation to meet life's demands, Indian youth are looking more and more to colleges and vocational training schools for additional education. Undoubtedly the awareness is due in great measure to more extensive high school counseling service.

Because most of our Indian population lives in a poverty or near poverty state as compared with the surrounding community, the Indian Education Supervisor in cooperation with educational personnel of the Bureau of Indian Affairs conducts a program to disseminate information regarding financial aids with which Indian youth can continue their education beyond high school. This program involves not only considerable communication by telephone and letter, but also visitation of every high school on or near Indian reservations at least once a year to confer with administrators, counseling personnel, and individual Indian students. Approximately 250 individual conferences were conducted in the state this year, plus those carried on with Montana Indians enrolled in the Bureau of Indian Affairs' off-reservation boarding schools.

The Indian Education Supervisor processes all applications for college fee-waivers as provided by Section 75-506.1, R.C.M. 1947, which states: "Any person of one-fourth ($\frac{1}{4}$) Indian blood or more who shall have completed the regular course of a four-year accredited high school or Federal Indian School in Montana, and shall have shown evidence of studious and industrious habits, shall be entitled, upon the recommendation of the state board of education, to enroll in any of the units of the university of Montana for four (4) years without the payment of fees required of students attending such institutions. The number of such Indians chosen each year shall not exceed forty-eight (48). Rules and regulations governing the selection of these pupils shall be formulated by the state board of education and the state superintendent of public instruction is hereby designated as the agent of the board in carrying out this act."

The Indian Education Supervisor works closely with Bureau of Indian Affairs education personnel in a followup program for Indian college students. The supervisor visits the students at least twice a year to personally encourage them, and to stimulate greater achievement through discussion.

Indian communities can now point with pride to many of their people who are successful in the world of work, having completed college undergraduate and graduate programs, and courses in vocational training schools. Because of the scarcity of job opportunities, many employed Indians return to the reservation only for occasional visits, and reside in areas that need their skills.

BLACKFEET INDIAN RESERVATION

The Blackfeet Indian Reservation is located in northwestern Montana, and has common boundaries on the west with Glacier National Park, and on the north with Alberta, Canada. Of the 1,525,712 acres in the original reservation, only 981,250 acres remain in trust status, and provide an income for the Blackfeet people.

The Blackfeet population has been increasing since the turn of the century. Bureau of Indian Affairs' figures indicate that the number of Blackfeet has increased from approximately 1,800 in 1895 to 12,000 today.

Most of the children of this reservation attend public schools. The Bureau of Indian Affairs maintains a modern boarding dormitory on the reservation for children coming from homes that are isolated from school, and/or whose homes are characterized by extreme social conditions. With a capacity of 160 children, the dormitory gives preference to elementary school children; these students attend public schools in Browning. Children meeting the boarding school acceptance criteria over and above the local quota are sent to off-reservation boarding schools.

Indian education funds are used in some schools on this reservation to supplement local and other federal revenue in meeting needs for school operation.

The reservation principal, employed by the Bureau of Indian Affairs, acts as a liaison between public school, community, and Bureau of Indian Affairs.

CROW INDIAN RESERVATION

The Crow Indian Reservation is located south and east of the city of Billings, and encompasses roughly 3,282,000 acres of land. According to Bureau of Indian Affairs' records, 1,574,230 acres are owned by individual members of the tribe.

At the end of 1965, the Crow tribe had 4,282 enrolled members. The actual number of Crows today would be considerably more than the above figure, because the population increase is much higher than the national average; however, many members of the tribe live off the reservation.

The children receive their formal elementary and secondary education in public schools, in boarding schools, and in mission schools. Many children enter school somewhat at a disadvantage in use of the English language. Extensive use of the native language still poses a problem to teachers, unless English is taught as a foreign language.

The problem of availability of high schools for children on the western edge of the reservation is partially solved by sending some children to high school in Edgar, which is located off the reservation.

The Crow Tribal Council elects a committee that acts on matters of education, and the Bureau of Indian Affairs maintains a staff member in education who works closely with this tribal committee.

Indian Education funds are used to supplement other revenues in providing educational services for the children of the Crow Indian Reservation.

FLATHEAD INDIAN RESERVATION

The Flathead Indian Reservation is the only Montana reservation located west of the Continental Divide. The reservation is bounded on the east by the Mission Range and on the west by the Cabinet and Couer d'Alene Mountains. Of a total area of about 622,600 acres, the tribe owns about 537,361 acres.

From early days, the Flathead Indians have had reasonably good relations with non-Indians. Because of this relationship, there has been a high degree of integration. Authoritative population estimates show somewhat over 5,200 people, with almost one-half living off the reservation.

Flathead children have attended public and mission schools for many years, with a small percentage enrolled in off-reservation boarding schools.

The Bureau of Indian Affairs has a staff member in education who works closely with schools and parents to bring about greater cooperation and understanding.

Indian Education funds are used to supplement other revenues in providing educational services for children of the Flathead Indian Reservation.

FORT BELKNAP INDIAN RESERVATION

The Fort Belknap Indian Reservation is located in northcentral Montana and constitutes an area of 597,112 acres. This reservation is the home of approximately 1,600 people from two tribes -- Gros Ventre and Assiniboine. More than half of the enrolled members live off-reservation.

Education for Fort Belknap children is provided by public schools on or near the reservation, one mission school at the southern end of the reservation, and off-reservation boarding schools maintained by the Bureau of Indian Affairs. St. Paul Mission at Hays conducts the only high school on the reservation. The Harlem school district operates a small bus in the Hays-Lodge Pole area for those people wishing to attend Harlem High School.

The Bureau of Indian Affairs maintains a staff member in education on this reservation.

Indian Education funds are used to supplement other revenues in providing educational services for Fort Belknap children.

FORT PECK INDIAN RESERVATION

The Fort Peck Indian Reservation extends over more than 2,000,000 acres in northeastern Montana. The reservation is bounded on the south by the Missouri River, along which most of the people live. East-west boundaries are close to the towns of Culbertson and Nashua respectively.

There are over 6,000 enrolled members of this reservation, from two distinct tribal groups -- Assiniboine and Sioux. Of these, almost half live off-reservation.

Children receive their formal education in public, parochial, and off-reservation boarding schools. Records indicate that children from the Fort Peck Reservation have attended public schools since 1935, which has resulted in considerable integration in the communities. The Bureau of Indian Affairs maintains a staff member in education on the reservation.

Indian education funds have been used by public schools on the Fort Peck Indian Reservation to supplement other local, state, and federal revenues in providing educational services to Indian children.

NORTHERN CHEYENNE INDIAN RESERVATION

The Northern Cheyenne Indian Reservation is a small reservation of 445,157 acres created by executive order for the Cheyenne Indians who refused to stay in Oklahoma. There are approximately 3,000 enrolled members of the tribe; however, many of these make their homes away from the reservation.

Children of this reservation are educated in public schools on or off the reservation, in a mission school just off the reservation, and in federal day and boarding schools on and off the reservation.

Public schools on or near the reservation were able to provide all educational services with available local, state, and federal revenues without seeking supplemental aid from Indian Education.

ROCKY BOY'S INDIAN RESERVATION

The Rocky Boy's Indian Reservation is a land area of 107,532 acres situated about twenty-five miles south of Havre. Created by executive order to provide a home for a small wandering band of Chippewa and Cree Indians, the reservation has about 1,500 enrolled members; however, many live off the reservation or move off to follow seasonal labor.

The children of Rocky Boy's Indian Reservation are educated in public schools on or off-reservation, and in off-reservation Bureau of Indian Affairs' boarding schools. The Bureau of Indian Affairs maintains a staff member in education on the reservation.

Indian education funds have been used by public schools on or near the reservation to supplement other local, state, and federal revenue in providing educational services to the children.

PROBLEMS CONCERNING INDIAN EDUCATION

In order to make this report more comprehensive, administrators of schools serving heavy populations of Indians were asked to supply statements on predominant problems encountered in educating Indian children.

Even though most of the statements are of a negative nature, many positive statements indicated improvements in reading, attendance, and dropout rates. The more frequent negative statements concerned retardation in use of English, sporadic attendance, lack of concern for the property of others, poor nutrition, poor self-image, little parental direction, too much permissiveness on the part of parents, and little regard on the part of teachers for the Indian child's background and need.
